DETAILED ACTION

Continued Examination Under 37 CFR 1.114

A request for continued examination under 37 CFR 1.114, including the fee set forth in 37 CFR 1.17(e), was filed in this application after final rejection. Since this application is eligible for continued examination under 37 CFR 1.114, and the fee set forth in 37 CFR 1.17(e) has been timely paid, the finality of the previous Office action has been withdrawn pursuant to 37 CFR 1.114. Applicant's submission filed on January 22, 2009 has been entered.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1, 3-5 and 40 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Nakamura et al (US Patent 5,636,042) in view of Choi (US Patent 6,169,592). In re claim 1, Nakamura et al discloses a panel for a liquid crystal display, comprising: an insulating substrate (300) having a flat surface; a transparent electrode (341) disposed color filter (321); a black matrix (311) disposed on the transparent electrode; and a protrusion (orientation film 413) disposed on the black matrix (Figure 2; column 4 – column 5). Furthermore, Nakamura et al discloses a color filter (321) disposed on the substrate (300) (Figure 2; column 4, line 65 – column 5, line 3).

Choi discloses using a photosensitive material, such as polyimide, for an orientation layer in liquid crystal display devices (i.e. column 2, lines 55-63).

The advantage is to provide stability and durability in the liquid crystal display device (column 2, lines 5-8).

Thus, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have modified the liquid crystal display as taught by Nakamura et al with using a photosensitive material, such as polyimide, for an orientation layer in liquid crystal display devices as taught by Choi in order to provide stability and durability in the liquid crystal display device.

In re claim 3, the claimed invention is a product-by-process claim and even though product-by-process claims are limited by and defined by the process, determination of patentability is based on the product itself. The patentability of a product does not depend on its method of production. If the product in the product-by-process claim is the same as or obvious from a product of the prior art, the claim is unpatentable even though the prior product was made by a different process." In re Thorpe, 777F.2d 695, 698, 227 USPQ 964, 966 (Fed. Cir. 1985).

In re claims 4-5, Nakamura et al discloses the black matrix (311) is a laminate of a chrome oxide film and a chrome film (column 4, lines 60-65).

In re claim 40, Nakamura et al discloses the protrusion "contacts" (in this case, electrically or capacitively) the black matrix (Figure 2; column 4 – column 5).

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments filed January 22, 2009 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

In response to applicant's argument that the structural arrangement of Nakamura "is completely opposite to structural arrangement of Applicant's subject matter as recited in Claim 1," examiner asserts that the language used in claim 1, specifically the phrase "disposed on," does not limit the structural arrangement of the claimed invention. For example, a first layer that is on the upper surface or on the lower surface of a second layer is considered "disposed on" the second layer. Thus, the claimed invention is not patentably distinct over the liquid crystal display of Nakamura.
